—One week from next Thursday will come the masquerade ball of the Young Men's Quadrille club. As everyone holding an invitation to former parties is invited to this, there will be a large attendance and it is not necessary to say that the affair will be enjoyed. All makers will present themselves before a committee in the ante-room before entering the hall. Tickets have been placed at 50 cents for gentlemen and twenty-five cents for ladies which amounts to seventy-five cents a couple.

—Fairbank's unrivaled Soaps injure neither clothing nor skin. Everybody says so.

—The Congregational people are waiting hopefully for the day when they shall listen to the sound of a pipe organ in their own place of worship. The fund for that purpose is growing rapidly, but the largest addition to it has only just been made. Late yesterday afternoon a meeting of the Ladies' Aid Society was held at the church parlors. It was then announced that Mrs. J. A. Webb had presented the society one thousand dollars to be used as part of the fund. Mrs. Webb's more than generous action was a complete surprise to the ladies, and work will be resumed by them with increased energy, after this encouragement. There have been from time to time donations of fifty or one hundred dollars, and the society has raised almost one thousand dollars besides, so the organ fund now amounts to nearly $2,250.

AMONG THE ARTISTS.

Some of the Fine Paintings in Janesville—What Our Artists are Doing.

To produce a rare poem, an exquisite painting, or a fine musical composition requires the same innate perception of beauty, the same dreamy tangle, purity of thought and ideal conception. A poet delineates with his pen the shadowy pictures which he beholds in the dreamland of his fancy, the artist lists feeling visions of beauty often far surpassing his ability to delineate, and the musician enwraps with his instrument, gives faint utterances to melodies that sound their own way through his brain; melodies that are only the musical expression of lyric poems and glowing pictures seen in his mind.

All artists, not more copyists, cannot fail to give expression to their innate poetic conceptions.

The day has come when poor artists can become popular. The taste and intelligence of the people have passed their pupilage, and they now are too critical to be misled by mediocre efforts.

The army of artists is large and he who would excel must be a faithful worker and devoted student. Patient, vigilant study, unwearied discipline, and experiment, constitute the elements of success, for thus have all great artists toiled.

Half of Raphael's life was initiatory and bred the knowledge and skill, which was afterwards embodied in his works. Young artists should not fritter away too much time copying old masters. Copy from nature if it is only a spray, a lot or bud.

Those who have read with pleasure the article entitled "Plea for a Grassy Road," by W. H. Gibson, cannot fail to observe the exquisite grace of his illustrations.

Every tiny twig in a woodland copse is distinctly drawn, and he leads us into new beauties at every step.

An old artist advising a younger one, said, "Do for Heaven's sake paint a field, a flat swamp, anything but that inevitable stream, that everlasting hill."

Artists often spend their time on what has been well done, without extending their work to new fields. A work in the woods should furnish work for a whole winter, or even a walk down a grassy road, can supply countless studies to the observing artist. We often admire what is foreign, because of the name, forgetting that we have at home talent of a superior order.

This thought was suggested by an examination of the artistic work of Mrs. S. S. Judd. In her pictures the precision of her touch and the delicate tone of her colors serve to give her a marked individuality. Like Rembrandt, she obtains the casual effects of light and shade, the secret of chiaroscuro.

Among her larger paintings, "The Deluge" is a masterpiece. Here the sky, "almost human in its passion, almost spiritual in its tenderness," is spread as a canopy over the awful chaos of desolation. "The Bererite" is a representation of a Flemish soldier enjoying that delicious repose and quiet of mind, which accompanies a comfortable and generous libations of rare old native wines. The pose of the figure is perfect and the coloring is similar in effect to the rich tints used by Murillo, in representing the shriveled brownness of the skin in old age.

In the painting entitled "Beauty and Strength" an original design, the blending of nude and shadow is exquisite. In a face possessing rare lineaments of beauty, is depicted an expression of firmness and power, difficult to execute without using rugged outlines. Over the head is a radiance that seems to fall like a tender blessing on the upturned face. The theme is elevated but the artist had failed her design with powers and capacity commensurate to her subject. A view in water colors of a sunset scene on the Mississippi gives the after glow or reflection of the sunset upon the upper strata of clouds, and these rich colors are again reflected in the water, in the foreground. Many will remember these about 1800 years ago every evening after sunset, while in the east the rising moon wrapped the earth in silvery radiance. This view is replete with beauty, and reminds one of heavenly visions brightened by the "light that was never on land or sea."

Among Mrs. Judd's sketches from nature, near home, "A view on the Rock near Atton," is full of beauty, as is also the view of "The Bear's Den," near Pope's Springs. Her latest work is an original design, the "Allegorical Representation of Night." The beauty of this is commensurate with the difficulty of execution. There are no harsh lines of demarcation between the supple, limbo of the youth, and the rich black ground, but each rounded outline is delicately shaded into the perspective of sunset clouds.

Among her flower studies are sketches of the Egyptian lotus, and white lilies growing in the eloungs of the Mississippi. A cluster of peonies is finished with such transparency that one can almost feel the soft, clinging touch of their velvet petals. She has also a study of "golden candlesticks." This flower is so called from its resemblance to the candlesticks used in Jewish tabernacles.

"Is not the delineation of original conceptions the most difficult part of artistic work?" asked the writer.

"Certainly," replied Mrs. Judd. "I cannot paint an ideal mind picture without quiet reflection and uninterrupted work. I must catch the fleeting vision before it vanishes or I cannot recall it. But a true artist is always an original, for no one can accurately copy in colors."

The works of Mrs. Judd are the results of years of unceasing labor, sustained by intense love for her work and rare talent.

Among the younger artists, the paintings of Miss May Baldwin give great promise. Her specialties are figures and flowers, although she also has some fine landscapes. Among her flower studies, a bunch of dahlias and pansies and a cluster of milkweed, are especially fine. An original ideal head, "The Merchant of Cairo," accurately delineates the dignified, care-worn face of old age. Her elblings upon china, satin, and velvet, are executed with clearness and precision.

In the painting "A Roman Bride," the combination of gray with crimson in the drapery, is very effective. The expression is shy and modest, yet expectant, for she awaits the coming of one who will mark out her destiny for weal or woe.

A small sketch of a rose lying upon an old letter, is suggestive of fading flowers and unfading memories. An original design of "Peasant Girls of Normandy," possesses rich tones of coloring. This bust of all in execution, and perhaps, too, because the subject appeals to the sympathy of the heart, is a small painting of "Grandma at Her Quilting." The old fashioned bureau stands in the corner, and there, too, are the straight-backed wooden chairs and ancient clock.

The sunlight slants in through the low window, crowning with radiance the snow-white hair and care-worn wrinkled face, and blends with shadows on the padded floor. Ah, how many of us have enshrined within our hearts just such a blessed saintly face. It guards us like a sacred presence still, though long years lie between our life and hers.

Limited space forbids the further enumeration of other fine paintings in the city produced by superior artistic talent, but the subject will be resumed in the future.

THE BUILDING ASSOCIATION.

The Business Men's Association Considering the Question.

Dismissed at a Special Meeting Last Evening.

The Report of the Special Committee.

A special meeting of the Janesville Business Men's Association was held last evening to hear and consider the report of the special committee appointed to investigate the feasibility of forming a building association in this city.

Mr. Stanley D. Smith, chairman of the special committee, made the following report, which on motion was adopted:

The committee to whom was entrusted the matter of considering the feasibility of establishing a loan and building association in this city would respectfully report:

Your committee have given this matter such attention as they have been able to in the few days at their disposal. They find that these societies have a history extending over a period of more than half a century; that they have been almost uniformly prosperous and beneficial; that they have flourished through all the eastern states, and have so far spread over the northwest that Janesville is probably the largest town in Wisconsin without such an organization. The first society of the kind in this state was started in Appleton, about three years ago, while the first in our city was started in 1884, in the person of Mr. J. H. Gibson, who is now in Chicago and Milwaukee, where he is numerous and extensive, having multitudes of depositors and employing hundreds of thousands of dollars of capital. Your committee know of no reason, either small or great, which should prevent the establishment, or which would interfere with the prosperity of such an organization in Janesville.

Since the initiation of this subject was brought in the Business Men's Association, our local papers, with characteristic devotion to the interests of the city, have given it much attention and have devoted considerable space to the explanation of its details. Your committee feel that the opinion that nearly all persons who would say we are affected by the organization of such a society have thus been made familiar with its purposes and with the general methods of its management, consider that it is at this time, be superfluous to enter into a lengthy elucidation of the subject.

They further report that they have had before them the articles of incorporation and the by-laws and regulations of a large number of similar associations, and have read and compared them to some extent. While no two societies are alike in the details of their government they are all based on certain fundamental principles—namely, of aggressiveness and thriftiness in the most effective manner.

THE WATER WORKS.

The Board of Water Commissioners Now Ready to Contract for Putting in the Plant.

Another Proposition from a Private Company Meeting a Franchise.

It having now been demonstrated beyond question that a supply of water can be obtained at the proposed location of the pumping house of the water works the commissioners are now ready, the secretary of the board informs us, to contract for the immediate construction of the works, in accordance with the plans and specifications now before the common council. The board can do nothing without the concurrent action of the council, and as the matter now stands, the action of the common council is all that is required.

SLOCKER A CO. KNOCK OUT.

Mayor Winans upon reaching home last evening from Madison, found the following dispatch awaiting an answer: Boston, Mass. Jan. 20, 1887.

John Winans Mayor:

We propose to furnish your city with a full and complete system of water works embracing thirteen miles of pipe, stand pipe, two engines of two million gallons each; one hundred and sixty hydrants; guarantee ten fire streams one hundred feet high; domestic rates as low as the city can afford to pay; franchise, right to buy in two years; yearly hydrant rental $3,500. Works guaranteed first class. We refer to our works at Racine. Kindly answer at our expense.

TURNER, CLARK &amp; RAWSON, 50 State St.

This proposition is about one thousand dollars under that of Bullock &amp; Co., and is made by the owners and builders of the Racine works.

The question of water works and the ownership is being sharply agitated on the streets to-day, both for city and private ownership.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

HOODMAN BLIND.

This grand melo drama has met with the most flattering marks of approval wherever presented. The New York Journal says of it: "It is beyond controversy that Hoodman Blind secured immediate success at the Grand Opera House. The theatre was crowded."

KENNY GOW.

Joseph Murphy (whose name is a familiar one to every theatre goer) will appear at the opera house next week in "Kerry Gow." He was at Oshkosh on Wednesday night and the Northwestern says: "The play abounded with wit and humor of a high character and was in all a number of pathetic scenes which present an excellent opportunity for fine acting. In all of these places Joseph Murphy showed that he well deserves the reputation he has attained. As an Irish impersonator it is probable that he has few equals and no superiors."

PERSONAL.

—C. B. Miller, of Clinton, Iowa, is registered at the Grand.

—Miss Nellie Ames, of Milwaukee, is visiting Miss Lottie Plowright, of the third ward.

—Mrs. E. M. Loomis and her daughter, Miss Stella Loomis, of Ripon, are guests of Dr. and Mrs. E. E. Loomis, of the first ward.

—Mrs. E. G. Tracy, of Chicago, arrived on the 8:45 train last evening, to minister at the bedside of her mother, Mrs. M. H. Sorell, who has been very sick for two weeks past.

—Landlord F. J. Helling, of the Grand, returned last evening from a trip to Cincinnati and Louisville. When he took the train to return, the weather was warm and springlike, but before he got as far as Janesville, everything was coated with ice.
